Cathodic protection (CP; / k æ ' θ ɒ d ɪ k / ()) is a technique used to control the corrosion of a metal surface by making it the cathode of an electrochemical cell. A simple method of protection connects the metal to be protected to a more easily corroded "sacrificial metal" to act as the anode. The sacrificial metal then corrodes instead of the protected metal.

There are two basic criteria per NACE International standards you can use to confirm that a structure is cathodically protected. 100mV of polarization is the first criteria. This simple criteria entails that you first measure the potential of the structure without any CP applied (native potential).
